USS Wisconsin (BB-64). She is now the highlight of the Norfolk waterfront, a floating museum open to the public. Admission is $15.95, but seniors 55+ receive a $1.00 discount and veterans receive a $3.00 discount.

Her WWII history was all too brief. Our last numbered battleship. Commissioned April 1944, Wisconsin reported to the Pacific Fleet on October 2 1944. Following a series of training maneuvers off California and Hawaii, she reported to the WESTPAC 3rd Fleet on December 9, 1944. From then BB-64 operated with the Aircraft Carrier task forces – as an anti-aircraft escort - against Japanese targets in the Philippines. Taiwan, Mainland China, Hong Kong, and Vietnam. These operations lasted throughout January 1945, and secured the South China Sea for the US Navy.

Starting in February the fleet turned its attention towards Japan itself. Wisconsin supported attacks on Mainland Japan, on Iwo Jima, and Okinawa. She was able to defend against kamikaze attacks near Okinawa. Fleet operations there ended in June.

Wisconsin's final offensive operations against mainland Japan took place during July and August. Together with sister battleships she bombarded targets along the Japanese coastline.

Once Japan surrendered, Wisconsin joined sister ship Missouri at Tokyo Bay a few days after the famous signing ceremony, September 2. Remarkably BB-64 was unscathed during combat operations. Departing WESTPAC on September 23, she arrived in San Francisco on October 15. BB-64 finally arrived at her homeport Norfolk VA on January 18, 1946.

Light Amphibious Warship (LAWs). The Navy/Marine Corps team had planned to have this new warship under contract by now. But during the past two years the Navy's budget restrictions have not allowed the program to advance. The earliest possible steps forward now appear to be FY2025. In the meantime, Marine units are employing similar size/capable commercial ships (surrogates) to test their proposed concepts and tactics.

Trivia. Most of us will remember the traditional Navy "watch system". And probably not very fondly! Underway or inport, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

- From midnight to 0400, there was the Midwatch.
- 0400 – 0800, the Morning Watch.
- The Forenoon Watch was next, 0800 - noon.
- The Afternoon Watch ran from noon – 4 pm (1600).
- There were two watches between 4 and 8 pm (2000): the First Dog Watch 1600– 1800. The Second Dog Watch 1800 – 2000. This schedule permitted watch teams to eat their evening meal.
- Finally, the day was rounded out by the Evening Watch, 2000 – midnight.

Sincerely, Chris Nintzel, Secretary
